Michael and Rick,

First of all I want to thank you for setting that class up. It was a great opportunity to learn and practice something that many can't often put to work at our short ranges.

The instructors were well selected. They have a great background and years of experience to support their statements in the competition world and the 'tacti-cool' world so many want to live out but not really do it. Stories of being a scout-sniper and secret service agent draw folks like myself, even when it really shouldn't matter. One big observation though was the feeling this is the first time they had given a class period, not just in Iowa. Though planned out, the flow of the content wasn't smooth, making me feel at times like I was in speech class in HS. Once past that I was glad to get all the information relayed. I think it will be easier for both of them in the later classes when they don't have to talk on basic stuff and go more in depth in areas they probably think on for themselves most often. Also as gas guns become more popular more attention to that area would be nice on how to improve our operation of that platform. I look forward to working with these guys again.

The location was great as well. I think with a class that spends 90% of its time with students lying on the ground, figuring out spacing for students in advance considering the posts at the facility would go a long way. However keeping us off the grass was smart as the amount of bugs out there would have made comfortable shooting for that amount of people impossible. The bees sucked enough. Also I think next time having the port-potty closer to the class area would make those trips quicker so less class time is missed walking three ranges down the parking lot.

The linden house was fun. I haven't been in a bunk since I was a kid and I think that location was great. Dinner and breakfast were excellent. I could see that place being used for all training classes I am attending at Big Springs. However keep in mind some people will be couples or solo girls so the inclusion of their non-bunk room options would be advised.

Lastly, as a cheap bastard always trying to get a deal I think making small pitches or offers to class attendees is great. I have no idea how in the world I will ever afford it but I want one of those SN-3s like your brother had. Wow was that thing sharp. With the LMT guy there I'm sure the guy who's M1 didn't muster for is looking at one now. Also Tony was offering his books cheap at the end. I have no need for one but couldn't pass up the deal so I bought another one. This was an opportunity to hand a CCA training brochure as well.

If I forgot something or you want my response on something else I didn't comment on let me know.

Thanks again,

Michael M
